This architectural elevation drawing depicts a long, multi-sectored industrial building. The structure features a variety of rooflines, including gabled and flat sections. On the left side, there are two tall, slender chimneys and a small, rounded ventilation structure. The building's facade is composed of different materials and colors, with some sections appearing dark and others lighter. A series of large, dark, rectangular openings, likely doors or windows, are visible along the lower level. To the right of the main building complex, a tall, cylindrical silo or storage tank stands prominently, topped with a small platform or structure. The entire scene is set against a plain, light background, emphasizing the building's form and structure.
